The Kandinsky Effect

is a post-modern jazz Trio searching for new ways to improvise within the jazz idiom by blending the borders of jazz, rock, electronica, hip-hop, and experimental sounds to create a truly singular voice within instrumental music. Improvisation is ever-present, and spontaneity is paramount.

The band has been touring extensively throughout the U.S., Canada, and Europe over the last few years building new audiences with an adventurous yet accessible sound and a flair for the unexpected.

"The young Paris-based trio, The Kandinsky Effect, led by American-born saxophonist Warren Walker offers an invigorating take on modern jazz and improvisation."

The Los Angeles Times

"What do you get when you combine an American saxophonist, a self-proclaimed 'total gringo' bassist and a French drummer, playing progressive jazz in Europe? There's no one-size-fits-all answer. But The Kandinsky Effect, sure as heck blows the roof off the joint trying to figure it out for themselves."

"The group definitely has developed an individual style and produces a sound larger than their size would suggest. Many of the compositions are stylistically interesting and very catchy."
